Dear Colonel Marks,

I regret that my schedule does not permit me to personally attend the dedication ceremony for the Foreign Technology Division building. However, I have asked Mr. Ernest J. Zellmer, my Associate Deputy Director for Science and Technology, to represent me at this dedication ceremony. Looking forward to the continuation of our long professional association. I wish you all the best in your new facility.

Sincerely,

George Bush

The Foreign Technology Division (FTD) of the Air Force Systems Command (AFSC) is the primary Department of Defense (DOD) producer of foreign aerospace technical intelligence, providing accurate and timely technical information on the current capabilities and potential threats of foreign powers. To accomplish this mission, FTD analyzes foreign aerospace weapons systems to determine their performance, characteristics, capabilities, limitations and vulnerabilities. It also assesses foreign research and development trends applicable to design of future weapons systems to preclude technological surprise to the United States. FTD's technical intelligence products are disseminated throughout the DOD and other government agencies and are used to establish national intelligence estimates, assist R&D engineers to design qualitatively superior US aerospace systems and aid operational planners in developing tactics to enhance US weapons combat survivability.

The dedication of the Foreign Technology Division's new facility today culminates many years of effort to centralize all of the organization's resources and activities which were previously located in nine other buildings. Construction of this facility began in 1958 with the building of 100,000 sq ft of office and computer space. In 1964, a 40,000 sq ft wing was added to provide room for the growing function of sensor data processing and analysis. The last phase of construction was completed in June 1976, adding approximately 320,000 sq ft of laboratory and office space. The completion of this facility and the associated consolidation provides the appropriate environment in which the Foreign Technology Division can continue to expand its capabilities to meet the ever-increasing needs for scientific and technical intelligence.
